2. The briefing opened with an explanation from Mr. Fuller that CIA and INR had divided the 15 questions that the Committee wanted to be briefed on and would provide oral summaries before responding to additional questions from the members present at the briefing. [ ] then proceeded to briefly outline the key factors behind the outbreak of violence between the Sikhs and the Indian government. She described the size of the Sikh population, the Sikh Akali Dal Party, the emergence of fundamentalist leaders--most notably Sant Bhindranwale--, the escalation of violence in Punjab state, and the Army assault on the sacred Golden Temple in Amritsar in June 1984. Sikh grievances against the central government were discussed along with New Delhi's position and response and charges that the government has discriminated against Sikhs. With regard to alleged Pakistani and US involvement in the conflict, the Committee was told that the US intelligence community has no evidence to confirm a Pakistani government role, and that unfounded charges of US involvement repeatedly surface in India, due partly to Soviet propaganda efforts. 3. The segment of the briefing covered by Mr. Harris included more information about the Sikh terrorist movement led by Sant Bhindranwale, the Sikh movement for greater autonomy, the assault on the Golden Temple, and the prospects for a political settlement. Mr. Harris also discussed support to Sikhs in India from Sikh expatriates. (C)

4. The remainder of the briefing was consumed by a question and answer period. Members' questions focused on the validity of numerous accusations against the Indian government by Sikhs living in the US. Mr. Thompson of the State Department informed the Committee that this was an inopportune time for the US to get involved because New Delhi and the Sikhs were entering into sensitive negotiations and India was also nearing national elections in which Prime Minister Gandhi's opponents, including the Sikhs, could do well at the polls. The briefing ended with no follow-up matters and a note of appreciation to the briefers from Congressman Solarz. (C)
